ETHICS
IN THE WORKPLACE

By taking what you've learned in this class about thinking critically on matters of ethics, you should be able to put at least three things into action regarding ethical disagreements in the workplace.

Identify where people with different ethical perspectives are coming from. This can include people on the team, managers or owners of the business, and governmental or industry regulators that set laws and policies about how to operate.

IDENTIFY

UNDERSTAND

EXPRESS

Understand a way to move forward that captures relevant concerns from everyone on the team. Sometimes this involves compromise and it rarely makes everyone 100% happy, but it should always center a concern for respecting the various beliefs and perspectives that everyone brings to the table.

Express the similarities and differences about different ethical perspectives. This requires calm, careful discussion that respectfully makes room at the table for all sorts of different ideas.

Clarifying your ethical vision in this way can help you: develop your character, evaluate consequences, and prioritize the rights of others.

Develop your character

Evaluate consequences

Prioritize the rights of others